The Honorable Tom Vilsack
 Secretary, U.S. Department of Agriculture
 1400 Independence Ave., SW
 Washington, DC 20250

Dear Secretary Vilsack:

As outfitters, guides, gear manufacturers, retailers, and outdoor professionals whose livelihoods depend on world-class fishing, hunting, and outdoor recreation in Alaska, we urge you to reinstate protections for the more than 9 million acres of roadless areas in Southeast Alaska's Tongass National Forest, and to make good on your promise to transition away from unsustainable logging of undeveloped late successional forests toward management focused on recreation, visitor services, watershed health, and young-growth forest products. The Tongass Exemption fails to meet the current and future needs of Southeast Alaskans, the region's many visitors, and the hundreds of businesses like ours that provide more than a quarter of all jobs in the region.

The Tongass is world-renowned for its abundant salmon and steelhead, plentiful wildlife, and outstanding scenic beauty. It is among the world's richest wild salmon-producing regions, contributing approximately 50 million fish annually to Alaska's multi-billion-dollar commercial salmon industry. More than 5,000 salmon streams attract more than 100,000 recreational anglers annually to pursue all five species of Pacific salmon, steelhead, coastal cutthroat trout and Dolly Varden. World-class guided trophy hunts and the opportunity for nonresidents to buy multiple deer tags over the counter make the Tongass a premier hunting destination. Iconic scenes of bears fishing for salmon and stopovers for some of the world's largest bird migrations attract visitors from around the world to places like Pack Creek and the Yakutat Tern Festival. From the Situk River in the north to Prince of Wales Island in the south, the Tongass provides hunters, anglers and outdoor recreationists some of the best and most diverse outdoor opportunities available in North America.

Recognizing many of these values, your 2013 memorandum affirmed the USDA's 2010 commitment to rapidly transition away from unsustainable and costly old-growth logging over a 10- to 15-year period. As a result of your leadership and after multiple years of collaboration and hard compromise, a solution was reached to: (1) protect the most important and sensitive areas on the Tongass, including roadless areas, the Tongass 77, and TNC/Audubon conservation areas; (2) phase out large-scale old-growth logging; and (3) encourage investment in young-growth management. We stood by the Forest Service and supported the compromise then, and ask you to make good on your promise now.

The Tongass truly is a sportsmen's paradise—not just for Alaskans, but for all Americans. Pristine backcountry lands in the Tongass National Forest supply the clean water and quality spawning habitats that support the region's robust fisheries, contain much of the region's productive wildlife habitat for big game species, provide important subsistence and cultural resources, and are globally significant for carbon storage. Our livelihoods depend on those habitats and the hunting and fishing opportunities they provide. As business owners, we are seeking durable conservation solutions and sustainable forest management practices in the Tongass that promote community resilience across Southeast Alaska.

We urge you to recognize the immense importance of the Tongass' fish, wildlife, and backcountry roadless areas, and help reestablish the public's trust in the Forest Service, by reinstating roadless area protections and making good on the promise to transition the Tongass to management that is more ecologically, socially, and economically sustainable.
